Late Night Penn State and Campus Feud

What we would need

- The props and set (about $100-$150, one time charge)
- Prize money or money to purchase prizes (exact amount is at your discretion, but large prizes would generate publicity)
- A stage, two tables, blocking curtains, and other things similar to the setup of other Late Night events
- A room to hold a large audience (at Abington, 200 people attended, but campus only was attended by 3000 students)
- Two microphones (at least one of which must be cordless) and sound system
- An LCD projector and white screen to project onto
- Storage space to store the set and other supplies during the week
- Reimbursement for an ink cartridge to be used to produce the large signs behind the contestants and for publicity materials (estimated cost: $33.94)
- A simple USB Powerpoint clicker system (the one used at Abington cost $16.95)

What we can provide

- 10 dedicated volunteers, in the hopes to obtaining more volunteers as publicity hits the campus and during the events
- A 3Ghz computer with a powerful video card and the 1000-line software necessary to keep score and run the whiteboard
- Publicity materials and signs to advertise the event
- Everything else necessary to run the event

Other details

- Show could occur every week or every other week during the Spring semester, depending on availability of rooms and your plans; one show will probably take about one hour; one or two shows per night
- Contestant search could be random at first, but if game becomes popular, spots as contestants can be offered as rewards for other Late Night events
- Very little assistance would be necessary from your paid volunteers as the committee includes people who have run this event up to eight times in the past
